- Multiple forms of assessment are used.
- Sandra Kaplan’s icons are used for depth and complexity.
- Flexible groupings in classes and team teaching models have been developed.

Academic Excellence (continued)

- Course offerings allow students advance in math through Algebra II.
- A strong physical education program uses technology and fitness-for-life concepts.
- Support programs for intervention—rather than placing students in tracks—are designed to make progress toward restoring students to grade level performance.

Developmental Responsiveness

- The school uses a modified block schedule and a 10-week grading schedule.
- The school has a strong co-curricular program in place.
- The school presents quarterly and yearly academic awards to students.
- There is a school-wide emphasis on supporting the whole child.
- Counselors are connected to “families” and loop with students across three years.
- Interdisciplinary planning and teacher coordination are common.
- Technology is frequently used to support student learning.
- Twenty-first century classrooms with interactive technology and extensive teacher training produce powerful and innovative lessons for students.
- Students feel safe and connected to school.
- Parents have many opportunities to connect with and support the school.

Social Equity

- There is no tracking of students; all the teachers differentiate their instruction to meet the needs of all students.
- All student subgroups reach the school’s high academic expectations.
- All the students are heterogeneously grouped and not tracked.
- Elective course offerings include music, visual and performing arts, technology, foreign language(French, Spanish, and Mandarin), journalism, and leadership.
- Instruction is designed to meet students’ current skill levels.
- A positive school environment makes all students feel welcome and respected.

Organizational Support

- District delegates make financial allotments to the site.
- Staff, parents, and students provide input for site-based decision making.
- Mature staff members are well-grounded in middle-grades philosophy.
- The school receives strong district and community support. The district is very responsive to school staff members’ needs.
- The school uses collaborative decision making.
